“ Joe was a quiet man with a kind heart. He enjoyed the quiet life, close to home with his dear wife, Betty, and brother, John, living just down the road. He was much like his father and namesake, with an interest in all things mechanical, electrical and automotive. He studied electrical engineering at Point Park, but may have received his most practical education in the basement workshop of their Wilkinsburg house where there was always something being disassembled or reassembled on the workbench. He settled into his career and then met someone who changed his life in the best possible way, and the family welcomed Betty. I am so sorry for your loss, Betty, but so thankful that the two of you were together. And John, I'm sorry you have lost your steadfast friend and brother. He was a good man and will be missed.
