“ My Aunt Mae was tall, willowy, intelligent, strong, respected, fun and loved us. She worked as an emergency room nurse, that's my Aunt Mae, the toughest “nurse job“. I had surgery to straighten my broken nose and the ENT left the packing and splints to be removed a few days later. My face looked like I was smacked with a board and there was no way in hell anybody was going to touch it but my trusted Aunt Mae. She sat down in front of me, inspected and nipped the job in the butt. To be honest, I don't think she had very good sight at the time but she wouldn't let me down. My Dad can have you laughing over his exaggerations and Aunt Mae tells really good family history. She told me the cutest story about Junior running away from home up a tree over shoes. I love shoes! I'm comfortable in my skin and I contribute that to my Aunt Mae. When colleagues give me a hard time, I think “my Aunt Mae says I'm a really nice person” and look them in the eye and resolve the issue. She's the “best aunt ever”.
